Reader's Opinions

During World War II, fishing boats sailed by Norwegian fishermen sailed constantly from the Shetland Islands to ports in Norway to land agents, supplies and weapons, and to transport escaping Norwegians back to England. David Howarth, who has written several thrilling World War...

David Howarths The Shetland Bus tells of a dangerous and tenuous sea-link forged between Shetland and Norway during the war.Initially based in Lunna (later Scalloway) in the UK's most northerly island-group, a discreet fleet of fishing vessels was gathered to ferry men and supplies to and from the wartime resistance in Norway. Travelling...
